CHANGING TIMES Panelists at the awards ceremony say finding good teachers, retaining them not easy; highlight the new challenges owing to technology

principal speak

Unless schools retain and train teachers, it will be difficult to keep them on their payroll. These days, teachers are an entering lot. They must be given time and space to try new teaching techniques. Managements should laud teachers for trying out-of-the-box ways.

Today, most brilliant students want to join the corporate sector. We should look at ways to get them into teaching. The misconception that it is a profession only for women should be addressed. Schools must help teachers hone their skills and become excellent.

'NEED FOR BETTER COURSES TO TRAIN TEACHERS'

Amid talks of regular training for teachers by schools and training teaching standards in classrooms, some principals felt the problem lies at the very core of teacher training courses.

'NEW CROP OF OVEREMPOWERED STUDENTS'

On the one hand while schools pined for vibrant and full-time teaching standards, principals from schools across the city also highlighted the expanding knowledge of students in classrooms these days.
